THE CANTOR'S COUCH
Emanu-El welcomes NY Times columnist & Pulitzer Prize Journalist: BRET STEPHENS

Thursday, May 25, 2017
Check-in: 6:30 pm
Program: 7:00 pm

Subject: Opportunities and Challenges for America and Israel in Today’s Political Climate
Must RSVP. There will be no onsite registration.

Bret Stephens writes “Global View,” the Wall Street Journal’s foreign-affairs columnist, for which he won the 2013 Pulitzer Prize for distinguished commentary. He is the Journal’s deputy editorial-page editor, responsible for the opinion sections of the paper’s sister editions in Europe and Asia, and a member of the editorial board. He is also a regular panelist on the Journal Editorial Report, a weekly political talk show carried nationally by the Fox News Channel.

Mr. Stephens has reported stories from around the world, including Pakistan, Afghanistan, Iraq, Lebanon, Gaza and Egypt, and interviewed scores of world leaders, including every Israeli Prime Minister since Shimon Peres. In November 2014 Sentinel Books, published his first book, America in Retreat: The New Isolationism and the Coming Global Disorder.

This program is co-sponsored by AIPAC and Congregation Emanu-El’s Israel Action Committee.

JEWASIAN
A “FIRESIDE CONVERSATION” WITH HELEN KIM AND NOAH LEAVITT
Tuesday, May 30, 7:00 pm, Martin Meyer Sanctuary

JewAsian is a qualitative examination of the intersection of race, religion and ethnicity in the increasing number of households that are Jewish American and Asian American. Helen Kiyong Kim and Noah Samuel Leavitt’s book explores the larger social dimensions of intermarriages to explain how these particular unions reflect not only the identity of married individuals but also the communities to which they belong. Using in-depth interviews with couples and the children of Jewish American and Asian American marriages, Kim and Leavitt’s research sheds much-needed light on the everyday lives of these partnerships and how their children negotiate their own identities in the twenty-first century.

Helen Kim is a professor of sociology at Whitman College. She received her B.A. from the University of California at Berkeley, an M.A. from the University of Chicago, and Ph.D. from the University of Michigan. Her research focuses on the intersection of race and American Judaism in the contemporary era.

Noah S. Leavitt is Associate Dean for Student Engagement at Whitman College. He received his B.A. from Haverford College, an M.A. from the University of Chicago, and a J.D. from the University of Michigan. He also serves as a research associate in the Department of Sociology and is one of the college’s pre-law advisers. He has worked as an attorney, a teacher and a community organizer.

It was a Friday night in August 1973 and the cantor was just concluding the Aleinu prayer. My bat mitzvah. My father and I sat together on the bimah (no moms allowed). My dad whispered, “How are you doing?” I whispered back, “Kinda sad. I feel like I spent so much time preparing for this bat mitzvah, and now it is nearly over.” My dad smiled and whispered back, “Who knows? Maybe someday you will become a rabbi, Beth, and then you can do bat mitzvahs all the time!”

And that is exactly how the idea took hold. From that moment on, I could not imagine myself doing anything else but becoming a rabbi. I loved services. I loved the Jewish people. The first American-ordained woman rabbi, Rabbi Sally Priesand, had been ordained one year before my bat mitzvah and was the assistant rabbi in my grandparents’ temple, Stephen Wise Free Synagogue, in New York City. I wrote to Rabbi Priesand shortly after my bat mitzvah and told her of my dream to become a rabbi like her. She must have been having a bad day. Her response, which now resides in the American Jewish Archives, simply said, “Beth, you’re young. Think about considering other careers!” Ouch. But think about it. It cannot have been easy to be the only woman among male students and faculty throughout five years of rabbinical seminary. When women were first ordained, senior rabbis, boards of directors and congregants were skeptical of a woman’s ability to serve in this leadership capacity. As increasing numbers of women were ordained as rabbis, sociologists decried the fact and warned of the “feminization of the rabbinate,” which, to them, equaled a diminution of the stature of the (male) rabbi.

Our country has now ordained women rabbis for forty-five years. After Rabbi Priesand’s ordination, the Reconstructionist Movement quickly followed suit and eventually the Conservative movement. A well-regarded Orthodox rabbi in New York started ordaining Orthodox women in 2009. In 2016, Rabbi Daniel Landes began ordaining Orthodox women in Israel. The history of women rabbis, dating back to Rabbi Regina Jonas’ ordination in Germany in 1935, is fascinating. It is all chronicled in a new book that I highly recommend for your home library: The Sacred Calling: Four Decades of Women in the Rabbinate.

There are no rabbis in the Torah. In the Talmud, we read of a transformation from prophets to rabbinical sages and scholars. In the Middle Ages, rabbis took upon themselves the role of judges, acting as legal decisors and arbiters. The point is that transformations in spiritual leadership within Judaism have occurred since day one. What is new is the way that many women have transformed the contemporary rabbinate. The Reform rabbi of my childhood entered the rooms in his black robe and we all stood as he ascended the bimah. Women rabbis ushered in innovations such as the idea that rabbis are just people with a sacred calling. We strive to be in relationship with our congregants and not removed from them. We have taught all rabbis the value of work-life balance. These are just a few of the powerful transformations brought to Judaism by women rabbis.

On May 16th, Cantor Attie and I will be at the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion in Los Angeles to honor professional Jewish women’s leadership. Think about Cantor Roslyn Barak. Rabbi Sydney Mintz. Cantor Marsha Attie. Rabbi Gayle Pomerantz, Rabbi Michal Bourne, Rabbi Helen Cohn. Rabbi Carla Feneves. And me. As your rabbis and cantors, we are grateful to live in this time, and we hope that you are, too.
SPONSOR AN ONEG SHABBAT

Sponsoring an Oneg Shabbat for Friday evening is a lovely way to honor or remember a loved one or to celebrate a simcha. When you sponsor an Oneg Shabbat, you help us welcome Shabbat with the warmth and community that are characteristic of our congregation. In this “Year of Shabbat” at Congregation Emanu-El, we are taking turns as clergy to share a personal notion of Shabbat practice that is particularly meaningful. In that sprint, I share with you my thoughts on “Birkat Kohanim,” the priestly benediction. Every Friday night, it is customary for parents to bless their children at the Shabbat table with these ancient words that Moses’ brother Aaron originally bestowed upon his sons, as it is written:

May God bless you and keep you. May God cause God’s face to shine upon you and be gracious unto you. May God lift God’s face unto you and give you peace. (Num 6:23-27)

This is the oldest biblical blessing that we have archeological evidence of in Judaism. It was in use during the First Temple period in ancient Israel, some 2,500-3,000 years ago. Use of the blessing carried on past the destruction of the Second Temple 2,000 years ago, and into the Rabbinic period. Thereafter, it remained a constant, despite the hardships of Jewish persecution in medieval Europe, the Spanish Inquisition, the pogroms of Russia, and the Holocaust. Its use continues to this day in twenty-first century modernity.

In my childhood home, the ritual of the blessing of Friday night was performed by my father. Each one of the five children would line up oldest to youngest (I was number four), and when it was our turn, he would put his hand on our forehead, and recite the blessing in English. A kiss on the forehead always followed.

Now, at our own Shabbat table, Rachel and I have developed our own tradition around Birkat Kohanim: We cover the head of each child individually from either side and, getting in real close, together we whisper the blessing in Hebrew into both of their ears at once, add a personalized private message (in English) from each of us, and end with two simultaneous kisses on the forehead. This is our Shabbat minhag (ritual) for the priestly blessing. The kids have come to expect it as part of our Shabbat table routine, just as I did as a boy. This, and other traditional Jewish in-the-home rituals, passed on from generation to generation, have not only helped perpetuate our survival as a people through thousands of years, but also provide us with spiritual meaning, specifically through their weekly repetition.

Like lighting Shabbat candles or saying the kiddush (sanctification) over the wine, it is the weekly repetition of these Shabbat table rituals, through happy times and sad times, through sickness and health, that help provide a sacred structure for our lives. In other words, we celebrate with the wine in our cup, we cry with the wine in our cup, but no matter the situation we are in, come Friday night, the wine (or grape juice!) is always in our cup.

The last time my father offered upon me the words of Birkat Kohanim was on my wedding day. Just before I walked down the aisle, he put his hands on my head, recited the blessing and gently kissed my forehead.

Had we not had that weekly ritual growing up, and had that instance at my wedding instead been the very first time that my father had given me the priestly blessing, it still would have been a lovely moment, but it pales in comparison to the emotional depth that I experienced, knowing that this was, in a sense, the last time I would receive this weekly blessing from him after 30 years. I had grown up. Now it was time for us to think about starting our own family and blessing our own children.

I can’t help but wonder, how will our kids one day interpret this tradition, should they become parents? Do you have a tradition around the Priestly Benediction? If so, please share it with me! If not, it is never too late to start a new one! Try it every week and see what it does for your spiritual self.
BOOKPLATES FOR OUR NEW HIGH HOLY DAY PRAYER BOOKS!

During the High Holy Days of 2017 (5778), our congregation will be using the wonderful new set of prayer books (machzor). This High Holy Day prayer book (Machzor), comes in two volumes, one for Rosh Hashanah and one for Yom Kippur. These beautiful and inspiring editions represent the first new High Holy Days texts to be introduced in the Reform Movement in nearly 40 years.

Members have an opportunity to sponsor personalized bookplates to remember a loved one, celebrate a lifecycle occasion, or honor clergy, family and friends. These bookplates, inspired by the Emanu-El stained glass windows, are beautifully designed by a local Judaic artist and will be placed in each of the volumes.

Spring is an ideal time to recognize those who have inspired you in your life. It is also a time to celebrate the graduation or promotion of a child or grandchild.

STOCK DONATIONS

Did you know that you can make charitable gifts, including your Emanu-El membership dues and your Impact Fund gift, by donating appreciated stocks? With the Dow hovering at a record 20,000+ mark, this could be a good time to avoid potential capital gains taxes while fulfilling pledges to the temple or making new gifts. If you own marketable securities that you have held for at least one year, and whose value has increased, you can deduct the full market value and avoid paying capital gains taxes. This benefit could mean that you can make your donation for as little as fifty cents on the dollar!

We encourage you to consult your personal financial adviser to review your options and make decisions. Please contact the Development Office at tbrown@emanuelsf.org or (415) 750-7554 before your stock transfer is made so that your gift can be tracked and appropriately directed as you wish.

HOLIDAY: SHAVUOT

Shavuot is the Hebrew word for “weeks” and refers to the Jewish festival marking the giving of the Torah at Mount Sinai, which occurs seven weeks after Passover. Shavuot, like many other Jewish holidays, began as an ancient agricultural festival that marked the end of the spring barley harvest and the beginning of the summer wheat harvest. In ancient times, Shavuot was a pilgrimage festival during which Israelites brought crop offerings to the Temple in Jerusalem. Today, it is a celebration of Torah, education, and actively choosing to participate in Jewish life.

Many people stay up all night studying Torah. This custom evolved from the story that says that when the Israelites were at Sinai, they overslept and had to be awakened by Moses. As a result, many modern Jews stay up all night to study and celebrate receiving the Torah. These events, known as Tikun Leil Shavuot, which literally means “Rectification for Shavuot Night,” are understood as the custom of studying with a community in order to re-experience standing at Mount Sinai, where the Jewish people received the Torah. The Tikun Leil Shavuot was developed by 16th century mystics in Safed, who believed that by studying on Shavuot, they were symbolically preparing Israel to enter into a sacred relationship with God. Modern interpretations and versions of this practice include study on a wide range of topics.

It also is customary to eat dairy foods on Shavuot because Jewish tradition compares the words of Torah to the sweetness of milk and honey. Blintzes and cheesecake are among the popular foods to make and enjoy for the holiday.

SOUR CREAM CHEESECAKE

Crust:
1 3/4 cups graham cracker crumbs
1/3 cup butter, melted
1/4 cup granulated sugar

Blend graham cracker crumbs, sugar, and butter together. Press crumbs on sides and bottom of a well-greased 10-inch springform pan.

Cheesecake Filling:
3 8-ounce packages Philadelphia Original cream cheese, softened
1 1/2 cups granulated sugar
4 eggs
1 tablespoon vanilla

Mix softened cream cheese and sugar 3-5 minutes. Add eggs and vanilla. Beat the entire mixture for 30 minutes. (!) Pour the cream cheese batter into the graham cracker crust. Bake at 300 degrees for 50-60 minutes. Remove from oven. Cool at room temperature 20 minutes before finishing with sour cream topping.

Sour Cream Topping:
1 1/2 cups sour cream
1/4 cup granulated sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla

Blend sour cream, sugar, and vanilla together. Pour on top of cooled cheesecake, return to 300 degree oven for 10 more minutes.

Yield: 1 10-inch cheesecake

Recipe contributed by Rob Freedman, Director of Marketing, Congregation Emanu-El

You stand this day (Atem nitzavim hayom), all of you, before the Eternal your God — you tribal heads, you elders, and you officials, all the men of Israel, you children, you women, even the stranger within your camp, from woodchopper to water drawer...those who are standing here with us this day before the Eternal our God and ...those who are not with us here this day...to enter into the covenant of the Eternal you God” (Deuteronomy 29:9-14)
Back in February, Rabbis Rodich and Mintz, along with congregants Benji and Jason Friend, launched our new innovative program Eimatai: Disruptive Judaism for Future Leaders. This is a year-long project bringing together 25 young adults. I talked with Benji and Rabbi Rodich to learn more about this initiative and the impact it’s having on participants.

Byron: Take us back to the beginning. What was the genesis for Eimatai?

Rabbi Rodich: This all started at lunch more than a year ago with Benji and Jason Friend, and [Emanu-El executive director] David Goldman. Both Benji and Jason were expressing some irritation about a lack of depth in young adult Jewish programming in the Jewish world. Both shared a desire to see something more meaningful and at a higher level of commitment from participants aside from just the typical one-off stuff. That conversation eventually led to Eimatai, our program for 25 young adult members of Emanu-El who are committing to a year of intense Jewish learning and growth together as a cohort.

Eimatai comes from the quote by Rabbi Hillel in the Talmud, “If not now, when?” Hillel is asking: “When are you going to claim your tradition? When are you going to claim your place at the table?”

Benji: Jason and I did an analysis. We’d been frustrated. In the Jewish world, everyone asks for everything without a true plan. From our perspective, we felt we could bring an energy that we’d been blessed with. My dad [Emanu-El president, Donny Friend] and mom gave us a Jewish upbringing. Eimatai was our collective response to feeling that more could be learned from studying our tradition now that we were young adults. We were not afraid to dive into the text and explicitly call it a learning program. That is what is special about it and what makes me so excited to go back.

Byron: Let’s talk about that first session and retreat.

Benji: We met at Walker Creek Ranch in Petaluma. The opening session was titled, “Together, With Love, We Can Change the World: Jewish Learning as Counter-Cultural Rebellion.” The rabbis started us off by studying a passage in Exodus. In this case, the first lesson we covered was “an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth,” and how its meaning has evolved over time.

Rabbi Rodich: At the retreat, it was unexpectedly powerful. The responses that we got were incredible. There was a very good feeling established among the cohort. That particular exercise really showed how the rabbis were able to take a teaching in Torah that seems to argue for the death penalty and instead change its meaning to the idea of compensatory damage rather than something retributive.

We wanted to show the group how rabbis read Torah. And how rabbinic history actually takes up the ancient biblical tradition and uses it to change things. We have this idea that everything is static and fixed in ancient Judaism but in fact the earliest rabbis were radical reformers.

Byron: Asking questions is central to Judaism. What I’ve always loved about Reform Judaism is its encouragement to think critically and its embrace of diverse opinion.

Benji: Well, Judaism is rooted in the sea of tradition. But that is not to say it doesn’t continue to evolve and that we can’t continue to make our own mark on it. That’s why it felt so empowering. For example, we went on to watch a movie called The Tribe and it prompted a very moving discussion about everyone’s own Jewish identities. It helped us to set the framework. We had a very emotional and stirring conversation about our own Jewish identity. Here is something we’ve been given and here is what works and what may not work. But we can create a Judaism that is both relevant and speaks to us.
Byron: What do you hope a Jewish practice might look like for the program’s participants once it’s finished?

Rabbi Rodich: I don’t have a particular place I need for people to arrive at other than to be able to articulate more clearly for themselves what their Jewish life looks like and will look like. Towards the end of the year, we will do a session on articulating one’s own Jewish values and practice but it’s not one defined act. It’s educating people and letting people choose. It’s Reform Judaism at its best.

Benji: It gives people information to arm themselves to make whatever decision they want. We started from such different levels. We have some people in the class who’ve already had some Jewish religious education while others have never even looked at a machzor (High Holy Days prayerbook) or read any of the Torah in their life. The spectrum is so large and to hear everyone’s perspective has been very rewarding.

Rabbi Rodich: If we can equip the next generation of Jewish leaders with deeper Jewish knowledge, it should inform their leadership in profound ways. We definitely are going to be tackling some big issues.

Byron: Like what, for example?

Rabbi Rodich: At the retreat, we read David Hartman’s famous essay, Auschwitz or Sinai, which, in a provocative way, asks whether Auschwitz or Sinai will be our orienting framework for Judaism. Will we allow the ethical call to be people of Torah and people of Israel to be our primary purpose in the world, or will working to preserve the memory of those who died at Auschwitz and say “never again” be our singular purpose? Both need to be done but Hartman pushes us to return to something bigger and bolder than the memory of Jewish suffering to do Judaism in the world.

Byron: Does better understanding our own Judaism help us get closer to finding solutions to problems that seem insoluble in the world today?

Rabbi Rodich: Well, we’re going to be doing an extra special long session in August that deals with how to address the Israeli/Palestinian conflict, for example. I’d like for participants to come out of this being better equipped to have this difficult conversation in a community, and to develop leaders who can help the conversation be more functional and productive. It’s easy to debate but it’s harder to facilitate a meaningful exchange of opinions and ideas.

Byron: Any final message about a program that’s looking to craft the Jewish leaders of tomorrow?

Rabbi Rodich: What’s important here is that the participants of Eimatai weren’t lured by any shtick that is often used to try and engage young adults. It was just Judaism and the promise of deep community. The Jewish world spends a tremendous amount of resources trying to engage the young adult community with what I think are a lot of gimmicks. It often doesn’t work well. Our program has quickly proven to us that when you give people something real and you hold out for something more challenging, people will respond.

Byron: What’s your North Star? Are we scared of the past? Or are we ready to spring into the future? Think of a rock band you really love. Think of the energy and passion coming at you on stage. That is what it has been like. As we calibrate it, we have set it up so the clergy can deliver some real meaningful content for all of us.

Byron: It will be interesting to keep track of all the participants in this program.

Rabbi Rodich: There is the hope to do this again. We do want to keep tabs on everyone who is participating in this. It’s a long-term investment. I also want to give a special shout out to Rabbi Sydney Mintz. None of this would have happened without her and her amazing work establishing a framework for working with young adults at Emanu-El going back 18 years now. She’s been a critical partner of mine from the ground up. And even more importantly, nothing happens without strong lay leadership. Benji and Jason Friend have been tremendously supportive in taking a risk in trying out this experiment with us and I’ve been tremendously grateful. I’d also be remiss to not thank our senior rabbis and board of directors who also enthusiastically supported this effort, especially through approving the use of resources from the Matzger Fund, a donor-directed fund established several years ago to support young adult leadership education. It is amazing what can happen when a whole community comes together to support a new idea.

Byron: Thank you both for this inspiring discussion!

HAVE YOU REMEMBERED THE CONGREGATION IN YOUR ESTATE PLAN?

We invite you to become a member of the Emanu-El Legacy Circle. If you have included Congregation Emanu-El in your estate planning through a bequest or as a beneficiary of an insurance or retirement plan, you already qualify as a member of our Legacy Circle. Just let us know that you have done so.

As a member of this esteemed circle of supporters, you will join others in proclaiming your commitment to the life and mission of Congregation Emanu-El. If you have made a provision for Congregation Emanu-El in your will, or would like to speak with someone at the congregation about the Emanu-El Legacy Circle, please contact Development Director Lani Zinn at (415) 750-7557.

CELEBRATING A SHEHECHEYANU MOMENT?

Congregation Emanu-El is an ever-present partner in the transitional moments of our members’ lives. Be it a baby naming or brit milah, bar or bat mitzvah, conversion or wedding ceremony or a recovery from illness, the temple clergy and staff strive to ensure that each sacred ‘Shehecheyanu Moment’ is deeply fulfilling and personal. A donation to the Emanu-El Life-Cycle Fund is a lovely way to mark a personal life-cycle experience, to honor friends or family celebrating a happy milestone or in gratitude for the services the clergy provide during these profound moments.

Please donate online at www.emanuelsf.org or call the Development office at (415) 750-7554.

CONFIRMATION 2017-5777

Friday, May 19, 6:00 pm

Join our community in recognizing our outstanding teens. This service will be led by 12th grade Havurah Judah students. We will also honor teens who participated in the Jewish Teen Foundations, the San Francisco Diller Teen Fellowship program or the Maccabi Games.
We are a vibrant, sacred Jewish community that is dedicated to advancing our members’ lifelong involvement in Judaism through worship, learning, good deeds, and congregant to congregant connections.

You won’t want to miss this delightful one-man show featuring Cantor Jack Ben-Zion Mendelson. A master of Jewish liturgical music and a charming raconteur, he is the mentor to our own Cantor Arik Luck. Cantor Mendelson’s personal story harkens back to a simpler time in Brooklyn, and his thrilling voice and commanding presence have influenced and trained a generation of today’s cantorial talent. His mastery of Jewish sacred music is unparalleled.

We are thrilled to bring it to our congregation, rounding out this first new Jewish music concert season.
