Join us for this 40th anniversary of commemorating Yom HaShoah in San Francisco. Our community program honors those who died in the Shoah and educates four generations that have followed about their legacy. Learn how survivors organized the first Holocaust Remembrance in San Francisco, and hear testimony from Hana Berger Moran, born in a concentration camp, who against all odds managed to survive and tell her mother’s story of hope and strength.
THINKING ABOUT THE UNTHINKABLE
By Richard and Rhoda Goldman Senior Rabbi Beth Singer

I am terrible at remembering jokes, but for some reason, this one always stays with me: Jakey has lived a very long, wonderful life, but he lies on his deathbed upstairs at home, mostly unconscious. One morning, as his beloved of 60+ years sits at his side, his eyes suddenly flutter open. “Jakey! My Jakey, what is it?” She asks. Jakey, who doctors predicted might have died days ago, pulls himself upright for a moment and with a beatific smile asks, “Darling, is that your kugel I smell? Oh, that kugel! Yours is the best. Before I die, may I just have a few bites of your wonderful kugel?” She strokes his head and whispers, “I’m so sorry darling. It’s for the shiva!”

We Jews love our rituals and perhaps none are quite so helpful as the Jewish rituals that carry us through the choppy waters of grief and loss. Prior to the practices of contemporary medicine that save so many lives and increase our longevity, people experienced the death of loved ones on a much more regular basis. And before there were hospitals, nursing homes, hospice services, and funeral chapels, the families dealt with those deaths directly. The tradeoff, both for longer lives and for memorial chapels handling most of the details, is that it becomes difficult for us to regard death as a natural part of life. That is why I am delighted that Congregation Emanu-El is helping sponsor and host Reimagine End of Life. As you will read inside this month’s Chronicle, the Reimagine End of Life event explores death, dying, and bereavement, and celebrates life through the arts, spirituality, health care, and innovation. We are grateful to our own Rabbi Sydney Mintz for making Congregation Emanu-El one of the hubs for conversation on this challenging yet vital topic.

Throughout my years as a rabbi, I have noticed that even some Reform Jews who observe few Jewish ritual commandments often feel so bereft in the immediate period following the death of a loved one that the litany of Jewish burial and mourning rituals becomes an indispensable road map for walking through those first painful days, weeks, and months. The Jewish tradition’s preference for implementing the burial (or these days, cremation) as soon as possible, the several nights of shiva, the burning of the seven-day (yahrzeit) candle, the practice of reciting the Mourner’s Kaddish, and the indispensable gathering of the community all provide essential guideposts. It’s worth knowing the Jewish laws even if you choose to improvise. Maurice Lamm’s The Jewish Way in Death and Mourning is a practical guide to all of these traditions. Another of my favorite books to recommend to congregants struggling with grief is Naomy Levy’s To Begin Again: The Journey Toward Comfort, Strength, and Faith in Difficult Times. And, of course, every clergy person at Emanu-El is here for you when you need to talk. We will listen. But don’t wait until loss is upon you. Please join the Reimagine End of Life conversation this April 16 through 22.

WELCOME JULIE MAYER, PASTORAL CARE PROVIDER

It is our pleasure to introduce Julie Harrison Mayer, MSW, who will be assisting our clergy. Julie was born in Norfolk, Virginia, and was confirmed at Ohef Sholom Temple. After graduating from George Washington University in Washington, DC in 1987 with a double major of political science and speech communications, she earned her Master of Social Work from New York University. Julie worked as a social worker in New York City for 10 years. She concentrated mainly on geriatric social work, developing and administering Alzheimer’s day programs in Manhattan and Brooklyn. Julie also provided individual therapy and group therapy to nursing home residents throughout New York City, as well as managing national elder care resources and referral services for an employee assistance program.

Since Julie and her husband Alain arrived in San Francisco in 2000, they have been members of our congregation, with two children having attended preschool at Emanu-El. Julie has been an active volunteer, both at her children’s schools and at the synagogue. She served on the Caring Committee, and most recently worked on the Wise Aging initiative, which offers groups for congregants over age 50 to learn and share in the wisdom of growing older. Julie is looking forward to her new position as the Pastoral Care Provider at Emanu-El.

INTERVIEW WITH BRAD WOLFE, EMANU-EL CONGREGANT AND FOUNDER OF REIMAGINE END OF LIFE CONFERENCE

Congregation Emanu-El is working in partnership with the Reimagine End of Life conference in San Francisco from April 16 through April 22. Reimagine is co-created by a network of interested artists, storytellers, healthcare professionals, innovators, designers, organizations, and individuals, banding together to amplify the end-of-life conversation. This year’s End of Life conference will also feature several events right here at Temple Emanu-El. Rabbi Sydney Mintz had the opportunity to interview Reimagine’s producer Brad Wolfe to learn more about what makes this conference so unique.

Rabbi Sydney Mintz (SM): What was the inspiration for Reimagine? What in your personal life/history made this so important to you?

Brad Wolfe (BW): Reimagine is a new nonprofit that has partnered with the City of San Francisco to create Reimagine End of Life, a week of exploring big questions about life and death. With over 50 events across the city put on by 100+ collaborators, Reimagine focuses on the many aspects of life’s universal truth, from the sense of wonder death evokes, to how we should actually prepare for it, to ways we might honor and connect with those we’ve lost. Reimagine focuses on the many aspects of life’s universal truth, from the sense of wonder death evokes, to how we should actually prepare for it, to ways we might honor and connect with those we’ve lost.

My personal inspiration for Reimagine is rooted in thinking about how our limited time on earth can serve as a reminder to live more fully in the present, and that is something that actually grew out of my grandparents’ experience in Auschwitz. From an early age, I heard their stories firsthand. My grandmother survived and even kept others alive by choosing to divide up a small sandwich — secretly passed to her each day by a Nazi guard — into 18 tiny morsels for her fellow prisoners to share. My grandfather lived by scrounging food from the clothes draped on the bodies he was forced to carry from the crematoriums. I’ve often wondered, “What is so precious about life that, in the face of death, we are inspired to fight for more time?” The hope with Reimagine is that, if we can learn to stop avoiding death and instead come together to confront or even embrace it, we’ll become more inclined to also embrace life, lay our differences down, and celebrate one another while we can.

SM: Why do you think death is such a hard subject to talk about and so taboo for most of us in Western culture?

BW: Western communities aren’t as close-knit. Our elderly are often out of site and out of mind, and thus aging and death aren’t integrated into the fabric of our lives the way they are in other cultures. We tend less and less to have multi-generational living arrangements, where grandparents, parents, and grandchildren share one space. Death is something that happens somewhere else, often in hospitals, where we’re more focused on fighting against it than acknowledging or accepting it. Relatedly, death has historically been addressed through religion. As our cities have become increasingly secular, there are even fewer reasons for us to immerse ourselves in conversation about death and dying. These are the forces we’re tackling with Reimagine.

SM: What do you hope people will get out of the offerings over the course of the week?

BW: There’s something for everyone. Whether you’re interested in art and entertainment, spirituality, healthcare, or the logistics surrounding death, you’ll be sure to find events that resonate for you. But what you’ll most likely leave with is a sense of the optimistic, creative, and even sometimes humorous spirit that we generate when our community comes together to explore something so challenging yet so human.

SM: Why is this week different from all the other weeks?

BW: It’s rare for a city to come together around something so real. But the universality of death unites all of us, rich or poor, Democrat or Republican, old and young. If we think about experiences where communities do authentically connect, it’s often in the face of communal grief — after 9/11 or the recent Florida school shootings, for example. But during Reimagine, we posit that perhaps we can come together in solidarity without a preceding tragedy. Yes, many attendees may join while grieving, processing an impending loss, or reflecting on a past or present relationship, but the uplifting power lies in us simply choosing to make space for this topic, for creativity, and for each other.

SM: Why should an Emanu-El congregant attend Reimagine?

BW: You have to come. Emanu-El is hosting the most incredible week of events. Rabbi Mintz and Monica Pevzner have poured continued on page 8
NEGLECTED NARRATIVES: A CLOSE READING OF THE EARLY PROPHETS
With Taube Scholar Rabbi Stephen S. Pearce, PhD
Tuesdays, April 24 and May 1 & 8, 7:00 – 9:00 pm

The biblical accounts of Samson and Delilah, Samuel, Deborah, Saul, David, Solomon, Goliath, Jonathan, Jezebel, and Queen of Sheba are well known. Nevertheless, their narrative sources are obscure because they are found in the often-overlooked books of the Early Prophets — Joshua, Judges, I Samuel, II Samuel, I Kings, and II Kings — books that are sandwiched between the regularly studied Pentateuch (the first five books of the Bible) and the well-known Late Prophets — Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and so forth. This course will provide a close reading of the Early Prophets in a time frame that spans the entrance into and the conquest of the Promised Land by the Israelites following 40 years of wandering, the development of the Aaronide Priesthood, the construction of the Temple, the ascendancy of the kingship, and the division of the Holy Land into the independent nations of Israel and Judah.

A MENSCH FOR ALL SEASONS!

By Byron Gordon, Communications Manager

Dylan Keleman was no stranger to bar mitzvah. He’d attended previous ceremonies and saw first-hand the experience of stepping up to the bima and delivering in Hebrew the scripture, prayers, and chants associated with this religious rite of passage. But what he didn’t know was how challenging it would be to prepare for his bar mitzvah “virtually” and, in turn, unexpectedly raise several thousand for Emanu-El’s Community Service Fund.

“It was my idea to create a fund. I had this one conversation with my dad about what could I do for Tikun Olam and help make the world a better place,” said Dylan. “I proposed to my father that, instead of receiving more traditional type gifts, why not have people donate to a good cause? It made me feel satisfied knowing that I did something for this bar mitzvah.”

It all began back in September 2015 when Dylan’s family decided to move to Santiago, Chile. “My parents wanted us to be able to experience another culture, another way of life,” said Dylan. A big soccer player, having demonstrated skill and talent as early as age 3, Dylan now plays for one of Santiago’s top professional football clubs, the Club Deportivo Universidad Católica.

For the duration of 2017, Dylan corresponded via Skype with Rabbi Jason Rodich and Cantor Arik Luck as he trained for chanting his Torah portion — the story of Joseph, Parashat Mikets, book of Genesis, chapter 4, verses 15–32. “It was challenging, no doubt about it,” said Dylan. “We had discussions about how many verses I planned to do. Fifteen verses was long, but after a discussion with my dad, I was like, ‘let’s go for it!’ Dylan didn’t meet either Rabbi Rodich or Cantor Luck in person until the Wednesday before his bar mitzvah!

“I was definitely nervous the night before,” said Dylan, “Really nervous. But then, in the morning, I put on my suit, went to the temple, met with a whirlwind of friends and family, and then began the service. It was over before I knew it.”

For Dylan, repairing the world is one of Judaism’s most important tenets. Figuring out a way to help people was also a way to help him find closure with his bar mitzvah. Living in Chile made things a bit more complicated, but he eventually proposed the idea of having guests donate to a good cause in lieu of giving him presents.

Dylan then sent out a follow-up email invitation to all of his guests, listing a number of organizations, including Emanu-El’s Community Service Fund, which promotes and supports social justice and community service programs. To date, guests of Dylan’s bar mitzvah have contributed a total of approximately $3,800 to the temple fund.

“One of the things that drives me as a person is the desire to help people have good experiences in life,” said Dylan. “It’s something that this whole bar mitzvah experience has helped crystallize for me. As I think about what I want to do with my life, this is but one step of many I plan to take and hope will never end. I want to help others; helping people who need support will make this world a better place. I know I want to do something on a large scale.”

As far as becoming a bar mitzvah, Dylan says it was a beautiful process. “I really hope that every person who desires a bar mitzvah in the world takes advantage of it. It’s challenging, but in the end it’s just really fun. You have to appreciate what you’re going through, but you won’t expect what’s coming. Above all else, it will exceed your expectations.”

FROM WITNESSING DESTRUCTION TO WEAVING HOPE
By Byron Gordon, Communications Manager

An exquisite, multi-colored, custom-designed Torah scroll cover was formally delivered to Congregation Emanu-El this month, having been lovingly designed and hand-crafted by the finest tapestry designer/weaver duo in the United States: Yael Lurie and Jean Pierre Larochette.

“I want to echo just how grateful I am to Jan and Bob Newman for taking the lead, along with Anita Barzman in making this possible. The Torah is beautifully covered and will be used in such a meaningful way in our community,” said Senior Rabbi Jonathan Singer.

The completed tapestry features a Star of David at its center in various shades of blue surrounded by green and gold lettering. The Star of David extends out to a grid of smaller six-pointed stars. The stylized letter shin (symbolizing the name of God) creates an upward movement. At the base of the design is the word Zachar (remembering), which acts as a symbol for connecting the past with the present. “The overall color palette and design motif follows the existing ensemble of the four daily Torah covers we created back in 1992 and 1993,” said Yael, who created the image that Jean Pierre then wove.

The new Torah cover was recently “cut off” from the warp in a ceremony at the Lurie-Larochette studio in Berkeley. The warp (the lengthwise threads on a loom) is a basic constituent of all textiles, along with the weft (the threads that pass over and under the warp to make the cloth).

The new cover will be placed on the Czech Torah scroll that now reside in the temple’s Reuben R. Rinder chapel.

The intricate job of designing a tapestry begins with the use of a pencil, according to Yael. “There are no clear-cut ideas, just lines at the beginning. All of it is done by hand. I use color pencils and then we enlarge that design via a printer. We invert the image and I outline every shape and color transition as to give the most specific of instructions to Jean-Pierre to weave.”

The material used in a Lurie-Larochette tapestry is exactly the same as that used 50 years ago in Israel: merino wool/yarn from Australia and a very high-quality cotton processed in Sweden. “We work together on combinations with more than one strand of yarn,” continues Yael. “We work out the colors and then you weave the colors centered. I always know that pencil won’t imitate yarn. But when I work with the pencil I already have the yarn in mind.” Silks are used for the warp, and according to Jean-Pierre, “the warp is the soul of any tapestry.”

Yael and Jean Pierre are no strangers to Emanu-El, as they received one of their first commissions from our congregation back in 1977. They have designed five tapestry covers for the Torahs residing in Emanu-El’s Main Sanctuary, and have completed more than 80 works for temples throughout the world. “Whenever we work with synagogues with new projects, it always feels like it has to come from the heart. Not from any other place. It is soulful work,” said Yael. “I always feel very grateful when working on a project for a synagogue. It feels so full.”

Last year, the Emanu-El SF Chronicle documented member Anita Barzman’s personal journey of sponsoring and transporting Czech Torah scroll MST #221 (one of the few surviving scrolls saved from Nazi destruction from the city of Ostrava) from the Memorial Scrolls Trust Collection in London. It was a moving journey that also inspired members who participated in Emanu-El’s very special trip to central Europe to explore the rebirth of Judaism in such cities as Prague and Warsaw.

“The journey of this Torah scroll to Temple Emanu-El is a beautiful expression of remembrance...remembrance of the Holocaust victims that once prayed with this Torah,” said trip participant Jan Newman. “I was thinking about a meaningful gift to the temple from our group in honor of the memorable trip we took to Europe. The Czech Torah scroll Anita brought back from London needed a new cover. Immediately I thought about the handwoven, custom-made covers that adorn the Torahs in the Main Sanctuary. But we had to act fast,” said Jan. And act fast they did; in a little under two months, due to the generosity of European trip members, they were able to raise the funds necessary for Yael and Jean Pierre Larochette to begin their work.

A good portion of the history of tapestry in the United States, especially in the latter half of the 20th century, can be traced directly to Yael and Jean Pierre. Jean Pierre was born in Buenos Aires, Argentina, the son of Armand Larochette, a third-generation French Aubusson tapestry weaver. Jean Pierre apprenticed at his father’s workshop in Nazareth, and... from 1962 to 1964, at the invitation of the Israeli government, he studied and worked under the direction of internationally known French tapestry artist Jean Lurcat. “For me, it was a remarkable experience,” said Jean Pierre. “I was born into this tradition and it has never left my blood.”

Yael was born and raised in Givat Brenner Kibbutz (in the central district of Israel). Apprenticing with her father, she later studied with painter Jacob Wexler, who was head of the Avni Institute of Art and Design in Tel Aviv for nearly 20 years. She later studied at the Leshem Mosaic Workshop. Jean Pierre was invited by one of the founders of the Dada art movement, Marcel Yanco, to teach at Ein-Hod Artist village near Haifa. During his stay in Israel, Jean Pierre visited Givat Brenner Kibbutz where he was introduced to Yael Lurie and her paintings. The rest is history.

By the mid-1960s, both Yael and Jean Pierre had established themselves in the art milieu of Mexico City. They became a team, bonding in design and execution. Having exhibited many times in Mexico, they began taking time to visit the United States where, by the early 1970s, the workshop tapestry industry had dwindled.

When Yael and Jean Pierre arrived in San Francisco, they met up with Mark Adams, creator of the large stained-glass windows in our main sanctuary. The spark of professional European workshop tapestry would reestablish itself with a blockbuster collaboration between Adams and the Larochettes at the Palace of the Legion of Honor. The opportunity to teach tapestry at San Francisco State soon followed as Jean Pierre became co-founder and director of the San Francisco Tapestry Workshop at the university’s textile program in the 1970s and 80s.

By word of mouth, their work has expanded, with both Yael and Jean Pierre having completed some 300+ commissions for individual collectors and organizations. For Jean Pierre, executing the intricate patterns created by Yael is all about “being in the moment” as he stands for up to 10 hours on any given day working on his loom and methodically bringing Yael’s designs to light. “It’s like a journey. You have to be fit for this type of work. Luckily, Yael is an excellent cook. We eat mostly a vegetarian diet,” said Jean Pierre. “We also practice meditation. Our son, JG Larochette, began the Mindful Life Project, which has taught meditation to more than 9,000 schoolchildren in the Bay Area.”

Yael and Jean Pierre continue to conduct weaving workshops in Mexico and are opening up a studio up in the Sierra Nevada where they will schedule retreats to lead a new generation of weavers in a craft that remains the domain of a privileged few.
