SHALOM RAV FROM OUR RABBI

Why Partners Matter By Richard and Rhoda Goldman Senior Rabbi Beth Singer

Saturday, October 27, 2018 is a date we will always remember. The day of the gun massacre during Shabbat morning services at the Tree of Life Synagogue in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Killing eleven and wounding several others, this hate crime was the deadliest attack against American Jews in the history of the United States.

All weekend long following the shooting in Pittsburgh, Emanu-El congregants streamed into our building. Most wore expressions of sadness and grim determination on their faces. Hugs lasted longer than usual. Then phone calls and text messages started coming in. The first voice message I heard on that Saturday was from Reverend Amos Brown, our beloved partner from Third Baptist Church. Reverend Brown expressed the deepest level of kinship in the wake of such a brutal anti-Semitic attack, and he asked how he could be here for us. Michael Pappas, head of the San Francisco Interfaith Council, also checked in immediately, offering all forms of support. Among the many calls and texts I received throughout that weekend, the vast majority were from leaders of other faiths, and particularly from African-American members of our Black-Jewish Unity Group. Each one asked the same question: “How can I be there for you and for your community?”

In the weeks that followed, we received letters from other local religious leaders, as well as from neighbors who simply wanted us to know that they share our sorrow. One woman wrote, “To my beloved friends and neighbors of the beautiful Congregation Emanu-El, I love you all very much. This San Francisco lady will always love you.” In the wake of the tragedy, these communications of support were such a comfort. But also a reminder of how important it is to not simply think about victims of racial injustice, but to actually reach out to them.

Reaching out is a big part of what we do at Congregation Emanu-El. Community relationship and partnership building are a sacred part of our work.

To that end, in 1988, Congregation Emanu-El joined with Third Baptist Church in founding an interfaith tutorial program called “Back on Track” for underserved students in our community. The clergy who founded this program — Reverend Amos Brown and Rabbi Robert Kirschner — also started an annual Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. pulpit exchange, which we proudly continue to this day.

Please be with us on Friday, January 18 for the MLK Commemoration Service, one of our most inspiring Shabbat gatherings of the year. Details on this service are provided in this issue of the Chronicle. Please contact me if you’d like to be a welcoming ambassador that evening.

Join us also on January 20 for Sunday morning services at Third Baptist Church.

Each year, a great number of Emanu-El congregants participate in this joyous event, and it means so much to the congregants at Third Baptist to see us there. See details inside this issue of the Chronicle.

Some of our dearest partnerships are with the Jewish Community Relations Council, the San Francisco Interfaith Council, the American Jewish Committee, and our own Black-Jewish Unity Group. Members of San Francisco’s dwindling African-American community who show up to our meeting on the second Thursday of each month, at the African-American Arts and Culture Center on Fulton Street, feel a particular kinship with Jews. The meetings are so warm. We get to know each other better and we commit to acts of racial justice.

When something as evil and tragic as a mass shooting occurs in a house of worship — whether at the Emanuel African-American Methodist Episcopal Church in Charleston, South Carolina in 2015; the First Baptist Church in Sutherland Springs, Texas in 2017; or the Tree of Life Synagogue in Pittsburgh just a couple months ago — partnerships between our faiths are imperative. With partnership, we realize what we have in common, learn about our differences, and most importantly, show up for each other when one group is targeted.

Until we collectively figure out a way to reduce gun violence in communities around the country, in public places and houses of worship, it is almost a sure bet that our group (or another group) will be targeted again and again. Building strong partnerships that underscore our shared humanity is some of the holiest work we do here at Emanu-El.

Five Self-Care Tips for the ‘Sandwich Generation’

In Jewish tradition, there are few greater mitzvot than caring for our parents and loved ones as they age. Often this means taking on the physical, financial, and/or emotional care of aging parents, which can be a demanding job—especially for those who are also busy raising children at the same time.

Today, it's so common for middle age adults to care for both their parents and their children that it has its own term, the Sandwich Generation. According to PEW Research, 47% of adults in their 40s and 50s find themselves pinched between two generations.

It's no surprise, then, that the research shows that sandwich generation adults often experience higher levels of stress than other adults and are more likely to say they always feel rushed or pressed for time. More significantly, many also report bearing financial responsibility for both their children and their aging parents — often impacting their own financial future or well-being.

Caring for Yourself is Critical

With all of these responsibilities, it might be easy for anyone who identifies as “in the sandwich” to forget about their own needs, but self-care is critical to effectively supporting loved ones.

“Self-Care” refers to actively identifying your own needs and taking steps to meet them. On an airplane, we know that if an oxygen mask drops down we are to put our own mask on before assisting others; the same rule applies to nurturing those we love — only when we care for ourselves can we successfully care for others.

“Caregivers often put the needs of everyone else first, juggling competing demands of children, parents, and spouses and neglecting their own health and well-being,” says Nancy Masters, MSW, MPH, Associate Executive Director of Jewish Family and Children's Services, “Prioritizing self-care is essential for everyone in a caregiving role, but especially those in the sandwich generation.”

So how can you care for your loved ones, without losing sight of yourself? Below are Nancy's self-care recommendations for adults in the sandwich generations.

1 Set boundaries around your time

1. It may feel like you always need to be in three places at once, but setting boundaries around your time will help you get clear about what you can and can't do. Healthy boundaries mean having sometimes to say “no.” Nancy says, “Remind yourself that you are doing the best you can.”

2. Get finances out in the open

Talking openly with your parents and young adult children about your financial situation is important. Explain that you need to be considering your financial future while also caring for your loved ones. Setting limits can relieve some of the stress or uncertainty about your financial role.

It is also a good idea to talk to both a financial planner and estate planning attorney about your family's situation for guidance, strategy and advice. Ask about how you can best plan for anticipated costs in the future and find out if you or your parents could be eligible for any benefits or financial help.

3. Make it a family affair

One of the key elements of self-care is to be willing to ask for help when you need it, yet sometimes caregivers are so overwhelmed that they lose site of the fact that there are loved ones that may just be waiting to be asked!

Nancy suggests engaging family members in the care of an aging parent or a child whenever possible.

"Reach out to siblings and see if they are willing to help. Family members from out of the area can often take on specific tasks by phone or email, or time their visits so you can have a needed vacation." She also recommends that you find ways your spouse or partner can take something off your plate or provide additional support. Adult children, nieces, nephews, and family friends can also help with meals, errands, or by assisting with other chores.

4. Plan ahead

If you're moving into a caregiving role, do you know what your parent's priorities and wishes are for their care? Having conversations with them as early as possible will help give you peace of mind if the time comes that you need to make decisions for them. Ensure they have an advance directive (including a durable power of attorney for health care) in place or create one together.

5. Seek out professionals and organizations who can address your unique challenges

Navigating the challenges of caring for two generations at the same time is not easy, but there are programs and organizations that are experienced in tackling what can feel like complex issues.

Nancy recommends contacting a family-focused organization like JFCS, which can support those in the sandwich generation with everything from managing an aging loved one's care, to counseling, to expert parenting coaching and guidance.

...self care
is critical to effectively supporting loved ones.

The stress of caregiving can affect the whole family, but for the sandwich generation it is especially important that you don't forget to put on your oxygen mask first! Nancy says, "Try to do one nice thing for yourself every day — even if it something small. Taking care of yourself will make a big difference in your ability to take care of your loved ones."

To find out more about the various ways in which JFCS can support your whole family, visit www.jfcs.org.

What is the Tzedek Council?

The Congregation Emanu-El Tzedek Council was launched in August 2015 as a congregant-, board-, and clergy-run group, charged with the task of raising our participation and impact in the social justice arena. The Tzedek Council comprises four working groups, covering the following topics: Economic Justice, Education, Environment, and Human Rights. Tzedek Council Backpack Program

For youth experiencing homelessness in San Francisco

On Sunday, December 9, The Tzedek Council hosted “Light of Giving” — an afternoon of service and community, where more than 150 Emanu-El congregants assembled 300 backpacks with winter essentials for homeless youth served by Larkin Street Youth Services. These bags contained warm hats, scarfs, gloves, an umbrella, and a $50 Target gift card, all items that we hope will enhance the quality of life for youth in our city during these cold months. For many of these young people, this will be their only opportunity to receive a holiday gift.

Thank you to all of our donors and volunteers who made this program possible, from contributing funds to donating items to participating in the backpack assembly. San Francisco has more than 1,300 youth who are without shelter every night. But as we gathered to perform the mitzvah of Tikkun Olam in community with each other on December 9, we spread the light of the Chanukah to everyone in our city.

Winter Interfaith Shelter Dinners

Since 1988, the San Francisco Interfaith Council, Episcopal Community Services, and San Francisco Human Services Agency have partnered to operate the San Francisco Interfaith Winter Shelter. Designed to augment existing shelters during the coldest months of the year (the Sunday before Thanksgiving through the end of February), the Interfaith Winter Shelter provides breakfast and dinner as well as a safe, warm place to sleep for up to 100 homeless men each night.

The Interfaith Winter Shelter rotates hosting locations between four congregations — St. Boniface Catholic Church, St. Mary’s Cathedral, St. Mark’s Lutheran Church, and First Unitarian Universalist Society — and each year, a significant networking effort takes place between local faith communities. Congregation Emanu-El has been an enthusiastic partner in this venture for over a decade!

Volunteer to Help!

Each year, our dedicated congregants volunteer over the course of eight consecutive evenings to provide warm meals to the homeless men of San Francisco at St. Mark’s Lutheran Church. At the end of each evening, we give each of these gentlemen a bag of toiletries to keep. To volunteer to help with these dinners, please pick the evening that best fits your demographic, and log in to your “MyEmanu-El” membership portal on our website home page to register.

We Thank our Floral Committee

When you are in the Martin Meyer or Main Sanctuaries, did you ever wonder what florist we use for the beautiful arrangements? Well, just ask Judy Grossman, longtime chair of our hardworking Floral Committee and she'll tell you! Celebrating a Shehecheyanu Moment?

Congregation Emanu-El is a partner in the transitional moments of our members' lives. Be it a baby naming or brit milah, bar or bat mitzvah, conversion or wedding ceremony, or a recovery from illness, the Temple clergy and staff strive to ensure that each sacred "Shehecheyanu Moment" is deeply fulfilling and personal. A donation to the Emanu-El Life-Cycle Fund is a lovely way to mark a personal life-cycle experience, to honor friends or family celebrating a happy milestone or in gratitude for the services, the clergy provide during these profound moments.

Please donate online at www.emanuelf.org/donate-now/ or call the Development office at (415) 750-7554.
